

SUPER BOWL XLIV

SUPE TO NUTS IN THE CITY

Saint, Colt fan bars

By TODD VENEZIA, ERIN CALABRESE and SHARI LOGAN

Lonely Saints and Colts fans need not worry — there are places around New York that will be turned into little slices of New Orleans and Indianapolis during tomorrow's Super Bowl.

For Big Easy fans who want to watch their team, what better place to go than a bar partly owned by an actual Saint?

Brother Jimmy's will be turned into Bourbon Street on Mardi Gras, so fans of the Black and Gold can root for the bar's owner, Saints star linebacker Jonathan Vilma — a former New York Jet.

Scores of Saints fans have been packing the Murray Hill restaurant throughout the playoffs. For the Super Bowl, they can enjoy classic New Orleans drinks such as the Hurricane, and dishes such as jambalaya and po' boy sandwiches.

The New Orleans spirit also will be in full effect at Bourbon Street Bar and Grille in Hell's Kitchen, which is owned by former New Orleans residents.

"If you were here for the NFC Championship, you know that it's going to be fantastic," said manager Keith Santandelo. "We

- Super Bowl snacks / Pulse P. 25-27
- Even if Dwight Freeney plays, don't expect a big impact / Mark Cannizzaro, P. 55
- Commissioner cool in face of labor war / Mike Vaccaro, P. 50
- Super ride brings joy to Saints fans / Peter Finney Jr., P. 53

Complete coverage in Sports were filled to the brim and people were dancing in the bar and waving their napkins when the Saints won it."

The bar will be offering specials on Hurricanes and Abita, the New Orleans regional beer.

Another Saints standby is Bar None in the East Village.

Indianapolis fans unfortunately don't have as rich a culinary culture to enjoy, but they do have some city bars to gather at and root on Peyton Manning.

Keats Restaurant on the East Side has become the place for Colts fans to gather. Owner Alexander Nicholas said Colts backers bonded with Keats after the joint decided to put off the start of karaoke night so the football fans could watch the end of an Indy game.

PLACE OF WORSHIP: Transplanted Saints fans will cheer the black & gold at Brother Jimmy's.

While Saints fans get to enjoy rum-packed Hurricanes, Nicholas won't let Colts fans be left out. He has come up with three drinks for Colts fans: Colts Kamikaze shots, Peyton Manning Punch and Joseph Addai Apple-tinis.

Colts fans are also expected to gather at The Bulpen and Wicker Park, both on the Upper East Side.

todd.venezia@nypost.com

Where to watch

Colts bars

■ Keats Restaurant
842 Second Ave. (near East 45th Street)

■ The Bulpen
1678 First Ave. (between East 87th and 88th streets)

■ Wicker Park
1469 Third Ave. (at East 83rd Street)

Saints bars

■ Brother Jimmy's
181 Lexington Ave. (near East 31st Street)

■ Bar None
98 Third Ave. (between East 12th and 13th streets)

■ Bourbon Street Bar and Grille
346 W. 46th St. (between Eighth and Ninth avenues)

